In The Courage to Write, Ralph Keyes, an author who has taught writing for more than thirty years, assures us that anxiety is felt by writers at every level, especially when they dare to do their best. He describes the sequence of "courage points" through which all writers must pass, from the challenge of identifying a worthwhile project to the mixture of pride and panic they feel when examining a newly published book or article.

Writing is similar to extreme sports. It demands determination, intense training, pushing yourself to your limits and beyond — it takes courage. And it is not hard to pinpoint what holds a person back: fear. "I'm afraid to fail." "Do I really have something to say?"
"What if they don't like what I write?"

difference. The Courage to Write does not address technique and craft. Instead, it explores author Ralph Keyes' conviction that "good writing has less to do with acquired technique than with inner conviction" (pg. 117). A lot of what Keyes writes about will ring true with aspiring (and established) writers, and he does have some good advice.

Finding the courage to write is about sharing who you are without expectations or attachments. Successful writers need to let go of their need to be original. "Everything that needs to be said has already been said," said Andre Gide. "But, since no one was listening, everything must be said again."
